Dear Holy Rosary Friends and Families,

One of our parishioners recently asked about care for those at the end of life and what the Church teaching is on medical treatment; what treatment is common and expected, called “ordinary means” of treatment, and what is optional, or “extraordinary.”

Moral dilemmas can come up with conditions like these:

- a family member has who entered into a prolonged coma or a “persistent vegetative state” because of a tragic accident or illness. The person needs constant care, but has an otherwise healthy body, not needing life-sustaining equipment, like a respirator.
- a person with terminal illness, whose bodily functions are shutting down altogether and is either conscious or unconscious, e.g., an elderly person at the end of life.

It is important to know that both these conditions require food and hydration, what are always “ordinary means” of caring for the sick. For the first example, the comma or the “permanent vegetative state,” since the body is basically healthy, a means of providing regular food intake would also be required, i.e., a feeding tube. For the second, since the body is shutting down, the food would be provided as long as a person is able to swallow. After that hydration would be still done through IV.

The principle is that one does all that is necessary to give the basics of food and water. Despite what some in the medical profession say these days, food and water are never extraordinary means of life support! One could only make a decision not to provide nourishment when the body of a terminally ill person is becoming so weak it simply cannot take food anyway, i.e., a person near death choking on the food given. Otherwise, food and water are always to be provided.

Other forms of care beyond these are extraordinary, and a decision about them is up to the patient (or someone with power of attorney): resuscitation, respirator, dialysis, technically even pain medication (although everyone would want it).

Depriving a person of ordinary means of food and water, when the body is perfectly able to make use of these basics, is considered to be actively depriving a person of life. It is, in fact, euthanasia, an intentional taking of innocent life.

But for extraordinary means of treatment, when the body is actively dying on its own, and the medical treatment is used to prolong life or to provide comfort for the dying—there can be a decision to let the body continue its natural decline. There is in this case no failure to provide the basic needs of the body: warmth, hygiene, food, water.
